Dear Harold,

Once again the university administrators have ignored what little common sense they have and implemented some more "red tape". I stopped at the library yesterday to run Kinsey through the data-bank and was told I couldnt use the terminal because I wasnt attending classes "at that point in time." It seems that someone has come up with a new policy restricting use of the computer to students presently registered for classes. It didnt matter that I had my student I.D. and my Fall term registration card, they said that was no good until I actually started attending classes. There were several graduate students there who were trying to get a head start on research for their Fall classes and they wouldnt even let them use it. We all got together and went up to the Deans to complain, but all he did was read us the new policy statement and tell us there was nothing he could do. Nobody even knows who made the decision. Man, what a rip-off!

As a result, I had to rely on the printed index, which isnt as detailed. I did find an up-dated obituary index, but he's not there. Evidently the Times didnt carry his obit. I also checked the Congressional Records index for both subject + committee listings and found nothing [redacted] because that index is also incomplete. If you can wait for the information until I start classes the beginning of Sept.

I'll run it through the computer then. I'm really sorry you had to wait for nothing. When I start back in Sept., I'm going to raise hell with the student gov't over why I was not permitted to use a university facility even when I had proof that I was a continuing student.

I was talking to a guy who does a talk show here on KDKA radio. He said he had talked to you about doing the show but you're really too busy right now. I sure hope you can do the show sometime because, so far, every time he's done a show on the assassination he comes up with Cyril Wecht for the guest. For the people around here who are really interested in the subject, you would be a welcome relief from Wecht's diatribes.

Best,
Karen
